

Sir,

Hong Kong is terribly overpopulated. The locals are being crowded out of breathing space and walking space. Blindly increasing the population for the sake of doubtful economic gain is downright crazy and detrimental to the quality of life in Hong Kong. Not only do we need a cap on the population, we must drastically reduce the number.

To live a decent life, the population should be 4 million only, maximum no more than 5 million. Today, the number is well over 7 million, plus 3 million illegal immigrants, low quality tourists, parallel goods traders, students, labourers in the black market, we have 10 million people actively moving about in Hong Kong every day. The number of china chinese people being let loose into Hong Kong is far more than we could tolerate.

My view is stop allowing china chinese into Hong Kong immediately, and deport those who entered after 1997.
